

THE CAPTAIN DIGBY

A BRIEF HISTORY

The Captain Digby is possibly one of the oldest eating & drinking houses in Thanet. Lord Holland originally built it as a 'Bede House' between 1763 & 1768. This was a place for drinking & entertainment by Lord Holland's guests from the impressive Holland House some hundred yards to the south.

The name Captain Digby hails from Robert Digby, a nephew of Lord Holland who commanded a warship of the English fleet in 1759. It is recorded that when Lord Holland died he left a sum of money so that Captain Digby's health could be drunk every year by the customers. Also in his will was a sum to provide a bottle of wine to every young woman within the parish about to give birth. Sadly both these provisions seem to have lapsed through the years!

By 1797 the Kentish Gazette records that the tenant, Mr Herbert, welcomes numerous guests from all the Thanet towns arriving by horse at the 'Noble Captain Digby'.

Beneath the inn is a large subterranean cavern reputed to have been used by local Kingsgate smuggler, Joss Snelling & his infamous gang. Years ago, one could reach the beach below by going through a trap door in the cellar!

In 1816 the Captain Digby was recreated some yards away from the original site in the stables of the original 'Bede House'. The present day building is almost the same as the 1816 building but through the years has undergone several alterations such as the addition of the restaurant area in 1973.

On the 18th October 1861 the larger part of the 'Noble Captain Digby' fell over the cliff in a severe storm. A magazine of that date reports that the 'Noble Captain Digby' fell into the sea except part of one wing where a servant boy slept.

The last remains of the 'Noble Captain Digby', a flint gazebo situated right on the edge of the cliff, fell into the sea below during the winter of 1998. The Thorley Family, who have owned & operated the Digby since 1979, recovered some of the flint rubble & used it to build flower planters in the gardens at the Pavilion on Viking Bay, Broadstairs.

In 2001 The Captain Digby won the highly prestigious 'Family Pub of the Year' award at the National Publican Awards.

Our management team hope you enjoy your visit, as much as they, & our team, enjoy looking after you, & in the infamous words of 1797 tenant, Mr Herbert –
